

Plaster Hands

These impressions are of our pre school children.

Using sand the children pushed their hand into the sand, to create their own unique impression of their hand.

The children then mixed some plaster of paris, having done this the children discussed the difference between the rough texture of the sand against the smooth texture of the plaster and how it went from soft to hard once mixed with water.

While the liquid was still soft the children poured it into the impressions they had made and then waited for it to set creating these wonderful lasting impressions here on the wall.
